SUMMARY POINTS TO REMEMBER

MULTIPLE DISPLAYED PRICES
can be misleading to consumers.

A display price is one that reasonably appears to apply to the goods and includes either any price attached to or on the goods or any price published in a catalogue available to the public.
(For catalogues, it's a display price if either the advertised end date for the offer hasn't passed, or the catalogue would not be considered out-of-date.)

If you display multiple prices, the goods or services must be sold for the lowest displayed price.
